

Residence permit for the purpose of taking up qualified employment

Information on requirements, entitlements and the application process

The German Skilled Immigration Act, which was adopted in March 2020, provides new opportunities for skilled workers from non-EU countries to immigrate to Germany in order to take up employment. This applies to skilled workers with vocational qualifications as well as to skilled workers with academic qualifications.

Requirements

If you are a skilled worker who wants to work in Germany, the following requirements apply in order to receive a visa:

- vocational training certificate or university degree
- for all regulated occupations in Germany: certificate of recognition demonstrating the full equivalence of your qualification as well as professional practice permit
- for non-regulated occupations in Germany that require vocational training: certificate of recognition demonstrating the full equivalence of your qualification
- for non-regulated occupations in Germany that require an academic qualification: statement of comparability
- no specific requirements regarding German language skills (except for some regulated occupations in Germany for which the regional authority determines whether specific language skills are required); in general, it is your future employer's responsibility to examine if your language skills are sufficient
- work contract or job offer that matches your qualification; employment in related occupations is also possible (e.g. a baker may also work as a pastry cook in Germany)
- a work contract or job offer with a minimum salary of 46.860 € per year (2021) if you are older than 45 years
- approval of the German Federal Employment Agency regarding the working conditions and the suitability of your qualification

Entitlements

If you meet the above-mentioned requirements, you are entitled to:

- obtain a residence permit for the purpose of taking up qualified employment for up to four years – or less in case your employment contract has a shorter term
- request a residence permit for the immigration of your spouse and children (under the age of 18), if you fulfil the following criteria:
  - adequate residential space for you and your family
  - sufficient financial means to cover living expenses for yourself and your family
  - proof of basic German language skills of your spouse
- apply for a permanent residence permit after four years if you fulfil the following criteria:
  - qualified employment for at least 48 months

- contribution to the German pension fund for 48 months
- sufficient means to cover your living expenses and adequate residential space
- good knowledge of German language (at least language level B1) and basic knowledge of Germany's legal and social system

Application process in four steps

1. Recognition of qualification

As a skilled worker from a non-EU country who wants to work in Germany you need to prove that your foreign qualification is fully equivalent / comparable to the German reference occupation.

If you want to work in an occupation requiring vocational qualification or in a regulated occupation requiring academic qualification, you have to go through the recognition procedure. In order to receive a certificate of recognition, please contact the "Service Center for Professional Recognition" (ZSBA), accessible via the hotline "Working and Living in Germany". The ZSBA advisors will support you in identifying the appropriate reference occupation in Germany, compiling the application documents and identifying the relevant recognition authority in order to obtain your certificate. The recognition procedure costs between 100 € and 600 € and can take up to four months. Only if the certificate of recognition states that your qualification is fully equivalent, you may apply for a residence permit for the purpose of taking up qualified employment.

If you want to work in a non-regulated occupation in Germany that requires an academic qualification, you do not have to go through the above-mentioned recognition procedure, but you must prove that your foreign academic qualification is comparable to a German university degree through a comparative assessment. As a first step, you should check whether your university degree is listed in the database "Recognition and evaluation of foreign qualifications" (ANABIN). If ANABIN confirms comparability between your foreign university degree and the reference university degree in Germany, a printout of the result is sufficient.

If your foreign degree is not listed in the database, you have to request an individual statement of comparability from the "Central Office for Foreign Education" (ZAB). You can request the statement of comparability online, and it costs 200 €.

2. German language skills

The proof of German language skills is mandatory by law in certain cases only (e.g. for some regulated occupations in Germany). Nevertheless, it is recommended that you have at least basic German language skills in order to support your professional life and your overall successful integration in Germany. In many countries, various language schools offer – mostly fee-based – courses of German as a foreign language. Here is a small selection of language schools that offer German language courses as well as certified exams that are accepted by the German authorities.

3. Work contract / job offer

There are numerous online resources available for those looking for a job in Germany. Germany's largest online job exchange is the job portal of the German Federal Employment Agency. If you want to apply for a job, you usually have to submit the following documents to the employer:

- a covering letter, explaining your motivation for the job
- a curriculum vitae, ideally using the Europass format
- certificates of your qualifications from the educational institution(s) that you attended
- if available: reference letters from previous employers

Once you have found a job, your future employer should fill in the Declaration of Employment, which contains information on the functions and responsibilities of the employee, the working time and the salary as well as some other details. This declaration is needed as the German Federal Employment Agency will examine the working conditions and the suitability of your qualification for the job.

4. Visa application

Before taking up employment in Germany as a skilled worker from a non-EU country, you need a visa. On the website of the German Foreign Office, a “visa navigator” helps potential applicants to check which visa they need.

First of all, you have to make an appointment at the German Mission Abroad (embassy or consulate). You have to bring to the appointment translated and certified copies of the required documents for the residence permit for qualified employment (see listed requirements above) and the following documents:

- completed and signed application form
- biometric passport photos
- valid passport
- approval of travel health insurance
- visa fee

The German Mission Abroad will then examine your application and request an approval from the German Federal Employment Agency. The waiting time for a confirmation or rejection of a visa application differs from place to place.

Please note: Once you have a concrete job offer, you may authorise your future German employer to apply for the so-called fast-track procedure. This newly introduced process helps to speed up the administrative procedures for obtaining your certificate of recognition of foreign qualifications as well as your visa. The fee for this procedure is 411 € and is paid by the employer.
